A leghorn hat, trimmed in pink roses and green foliage, drooped over her face, and she carried a fetching pink-embroidered sunsnade. Everyody'in the car looked up and continued to gaze at her as she dug into a dainty ittle bag for her fare.

The car had gone but a few blocks when the woman next to her rang the bell to get out. As the woman rose—in some unaccountable way which certain people have—she stepped on the frame of the little parasol and snapped it right in two.

Roses Deepen.

The pretty girl's cheeks grew a rosler hue, for she had evidently spent many hours embroidering the sunshade. She probably remembered what a pleasure it had been to her at the seashore only a few weeks back and she might ever have taken pride in the fact that It had brought her a few additional pretty
